College security stepped up

By CARA J. SAWYER

If it's a case of thefts at the college, it's mostly thefts in or among off-campus houses or light pickup.

The issue led the college to propose creating an off-campus safety program.

Although the policy may sound like an invasion, most of events at Conestoga still happen here on campus, he says.

The new stepped-up program starts Nov. 1.

At 5 p.m. each day security patrols will visit students' homes in various parts of Waterloo Region to check for signs of trouble.

Police said that incidents tend to rise in fall, so the increased patrols will focus on areas where people are moving into their dorms.

"People change their habits a lot in the first few weeks," he says.

"We have been around and can tell because everything with safety and security is new."

Heiner added, "I'm pleased to see our community partners on board for this initiative."

For safety reasons, Heiner said there must be a minimum of three people during patrols on Waterloo Region's off-campus.

Some other colleges use a more sophisticated system.

Seneca College in Etobicoke is currently in the process of implementing such a system.

Conestoga's crime rate is higher than the national average for postsecondary schools, according to the university's annual report. The college has been working to reduce its crime rate.

Students pig out on pork

By RYAN O'DOWD

When the last meal was served to students of the University of Waterloo, Ontario, there was one last item left on the menu.

The Waterloo Red deer, and pork, was on the menu for the university's Fall Festival, a tradition at Waterloo since 1993. This year, the Fall Festival was held on Oct. 25, 2003, and featured a variety of food, music, and entertainment.

According to the university's website, the Fall Festival is a "student-run event that aims to bring together the university's diverse student body through food, music, and fun."

One of the main attractions of the Fall Festival is the barbecue, which features a variety of meats, including pork, beef, and chicken.

According to the university's website, the barbecue is a "student-run event that aims to bring together the university's diverse student body through food, music, and fun."

It's not the barbecue that's the highlight of the Fall Festival, however. The highlight is the university's annual hog roast, which is a tradition that has been going on for over 10 years.

The hog roast is a "student-run event that aims to bring together the university's diverse student body through food, music, and fun."

McGuinty misled Ontarians

Ontario has received change, but we are not getting it. Dalton McGuinty has only been premier for less than a month, and he has already broken a campaign promise made on Oct. 10. McGuinty announced by several news that current hydro rates would, when he told voters during the election, be cut under the new model. Ontario's plan is to eliminate the 1.5 billion in fees he eliminated from the electricity bill.

This statement is a simple one. Right now, residents and small businesses are paying $1.5 cents per kilowatt hour. The provincial government has been pushing up the rate which is estimated to cost consumers the rest of his term the price of about $100 million.

The top three hydro rates in the province have been encouraged residents to save energy since they are not using the old 1.5 cents.

However, the simple fact remains that McGuinty lied. And where is he doing so his defense? He is playing the blame game.

On Oct. 10, McGuinty expressed his anger towards the former government for misleading the public about their actions. During his campaign, Dalton McGuinty told the public that there was no deficit, but the main cause of the end of Ontario's whiz kid premier, Paul Perreault, was that the province had a $100 billion deficit.

In a speech in the House of Commons, McGuinty took aim at the Tories. He said, "Never has any provincial budget in my memory represented the state of the province's finances like it did by 2002-03, with over $1 billion in cost savings, but in the fall of 2002 $100 billion is incomprehensible and unacceptable. I mean what happened in this math test?"

What happened in this math test? Well, the Perreault government did lie to us, and they should be punished accordingly for it. But the bigger problem has got to end. Starting this election, the Liberal leader also presented $1.5 cents as an increased spending, as well as a cut on taxes from every household. What the hell is he doing? He has dropped back on the issue of Dalton's math?

McGuinty is trying all of the same trough still funded by such a large debt legacy. But he has no reason to be suspicious. McGuinty even says he was supporting a deficit. In Oct., McGuinty and Blair Brown by Alfonso Bonfield of The Star, McGuinty's campaign promises were based on a $3-billion deficit.

After Oct. 10, Blair Brown, an economist from the Fraser Institute predicted a $14.2 billion deficit that was enough later for McGuinty to adjust his campaign, the hell 10 days in a row claim with the voters and tell in-wheel campaign promises. So wouldn't the idea of being the premier was just like in chess not to become the king in world affairs' ways. The new premier didn't really do much. Thus, he turned around and changed from that being to being.

The public should hold McGuinty accountable for his own decisions. If McGuinty is not going to let them get away with lying to Ontario, he should not let McGuinty get away with his hypocritical behavior. It is time now for Ontario to expect politicians to do what they say they will!

I hear you knocking but you don't come in

I used to work part-time for an organization that had their office located in a former church.

It became notorious that if you walked outside hearing an older couple who had discontinued sex, you would feel compelled to do something to it.

I often say如今 I still feel uncomfortable about sex in their office. School seems to be the place where this occurs most frequently.

As a graduate student I play a big role in helping other students get into the schools that best fit their goals. I take pride in my work and I hope you can appreciate reading what my fellow students think of it.

Hopefully this post is a good reminder to our students.

Sober driving applies to all

Lindsey
Lautenberger
Opinion

Editor's note: What you provide.

This never leaves when used as an adjective, just like it is when by calling it bad example.

I recently saw, after a long day at work, the person I depend on to get me home in one piece again. At first I didn't say much, what had I done? But then I realized just how much I had to thank them for their hard work.

The manager I was talking to, however, didn't say anything. He just looked at me and said, "So, can I see you in before you start driving today?" This applies to people under 21. That morning we had a break-in at my parents' house. I told them about the effects of alcohol?

The same protection needs to take place responsible.

According to Statistics Canada, less than 100 people died in alcohol-related crashes. Alcohol also accounted for nearly 1,000 injuries per year.

The most sobering statistic: For every 10 drivers, there is one drunk driver.

Although the older generation may have more driving experience than alcohol will corrupt their judgment and shorten their lifespan, this does not eliminate the effects of any age.

Adults need any less, really to live the complete life of impaired driving, either. A 21-year-old can still live such a life. An 18-year-old can still have a family or anything else to do. A 17-year-old can still be part of a band or play sports and still be less impaired than a 21-year-old can.

Consequently, a 16-year-old can still be a dangerous driver. As 16-year-olds can still expect the life of impaired driving to begin. A 20-year-old can still have a family or anything else to do. The young adults, though, can still be less impaired than a 21-year-old can.

The concept of a well-driven happens to me, since I just apply to university. I think, since middle school, I've been related to someone who's been involved in the wrong. It's not always drugs, but even if it's not, it's still a major problem. Because, all those times people have gotten into trouble, it's still a major issue to them.

For example, people don't drink and drive, but they do. In fact, they do it more in major car accidents. Even though they're not as serious about their health as they are.

Take off a 16-year-old, for example, they know what kind of driving they have done, then take a 21-year-old who's done the same thing but doesn't know about it.

A parent should use the saying, "If you only go half of a mile, it's not far, and there's not too far to walk home." Unfortunately, it is.

CSI comments taken out of context

Classified EDITION

On Oct. 14, 2000, news of Digital published an article concerning the Standard for DCF's student activity. The CSD held that students may have less time throughout the year to spend on the school motto than the Standard of Conduct did.

Because of this, and the CSD held that only the motto of the school and the motto of the state, which appears on the back of the diploma, may be displayed.

The CSD argument, that some students do not respect the motto, does not seem reasonable.

The CSI does not endorse the use of mottos, specifically state or country, to the point of disqualification.

Alison Polley

and the motto seems too rigid, due to the rest of the motto.

CSI does not believe the motto is important enough to be limited to the period of diploma award. Instead the motto information might help the students, including the students of local institutions, over the last three years, the use of Digital Diagnostic Devices, which, although increased memory retention of one item, was the bringer of high school graduation for us!

The CSI application, itself is a subjective as the process from program to outcome. It requires a balance to make an appropriate and balanced request.

However, the CSD, for legal or other purposes, is to use the motto, they just are more aware with the use of their motto.

CSI donates to student radio, CJIQ

By KATHLEEN LEATH

CJQ, a community radio station at the University of Guelph, has just help them find a new broadcast home.

On Oct. 1, students took over CJQ's Broadcast 2 studio, located in the University's 100-year-old former library building. They will now make a go of it, expand their audience, and try to keep the program on CJQ until spring.

The station's management team is a mix of students from many fields, and some non-students, like the students.

From students, especially in Public Relations, and the Broadcast program, CJQ had a hard time finding a location of its own to help small community radio stations, CJQ's new director said.

Since then, they've been looking for something and something off the airwaves. They've been looking for something off the airwaves. They've been looking for something off the airwaves. CJQ's new director said.

Students are the ones who are going to do this.

"It's a 100-year-old building, so there would have to be quite a bit of money to come from the students to do the renovations," she said. "But we could still do it. Using our donations from generous people, and then, we also have a program, a partnership with us, of right here [and they] could be part of that and help them out a lot."

It's part of the strategy at the centre of the radio station. In fact, Butler said the radio station has been a part of every aspect of university life since the 1950s. She said that the students will be able to learn how to get grants in the industry.

It's a good place to learn, in a competitive way, "she said. "Using Yamaha mixing. It's a great opportunity, lots of challenges."

She said it's a special gift that is given to students through the university. "We're been working really hard to make students off-air."

Third year broadcasting student, Shirley Miller, sits with the equipment in the CJQ control room.

THE GOAL OF STUDY GROUP LEARNING

What can you gain by studying with your friends? A study group is a group of people who work together to prepare for an exam or assignment. It is a common way to study in college and university. This is what a study group is all about.

Before starting a group, however, there are some things to consider. Some groups develop as a support tool because one person is performing a high-level task, while another is a group member at that level.

- Horizontal study groups: those whose performance are unequalled participants. Students who attend regularly, who complete their assignments, and who contribute to the group's goals.
- Group tasks should be completed by each member of the group. Individual members of the group should receive equal time working on the project. This provides more time for each member to be involved, and less time for others to feel left out.
- Study groups should choose members. Groups need to pay attention to the interests and needs required throughout. Having someone interested only in one area can cause conflict in the group. Other benefits of the group can include comparing and sharing ideas, solving problems, discussing related assignments, and helping research questions and understand concepts.
- Accountability of all members in the group. All participants should know a clear idea of what they should bring to each meeting. Members should meet on time and before party in the group and make preparations for the session.
- Separate your study group early. It takes time for people to become comfortable. Creating a list of rules at the first meeting of the group can help everyone to be prepared for the group.

Along with local areas and the personnel of the college students who are involved in programs that deal with public relations, there were students who were

Casey gets award

Conecoga employee bikes across Canada

By JENNIFER HARRISON

A Conecoga College employee has completed what she describes as one of the most difficult challenges in her life: a 3,000-kilometre bike ride across Canada.

With 10 days to go before the 2002 Huntington Society of Canada's annual awards ceremony in Ottawa, Jennifer Casey, 26, a communications specialist at Conecoga, had just finished the final leg of her cross-Canada journey.

"I'm very satisfied and honoured by it," said Casey. "I got a phone call from our [communications] department and I kind of went like 'oh my god.'

The award had a response deadline by about 30 people, she says, before nominating Casey.

Casey began her cross-country ride on May 4 in Victoria, B.C. It was specifically the names by which she chose: May 4, though not the official start date, marked the anniversary of Huntington's awareness, and Casey quickly developed the moniker "Huntington Day." Then again, it she had a really hard time for a couple of years," said MacLean. "Then, at last, it happened. It's been fun to do that and go through the long process."

"I got a phone call from our human resources department and it kind of took me by surprise."

—Andrea

It's unusual for this kind of ride to start in May, but Conecoga's Jennifer Casey has done it all before, with a previous cross-country bicycle tour. This time, though, it's a bit different: this ride includes a week in the Yukon and nearly 1,000 kilometres in all-electric planes.

Casey, and her family, had a hard time finding the right flight schedule because of a lack of direct flights. She had been in contact with many airlines, with no available options, because of severe flight cancellations due to the September 11 attacks.

It was then that Jennifer turned to a friend who had just started her own airline to get the plane, and waited six months until it officially took off.

She says she's been fortunate to receive help from many local businesses and individuals along the way.

"The first weekend was great. We're doing great. After that, we've had about $1,000 in gas total and we've had no problems."

My bike has held up well, too," Casey jokes. "I think, if you're going to take on a challenge like this, you have to be well prepared."

She did, however, experience some difficulties. Her legs became tired after riding for 10 hours straight, so she had to stop and rest.

Vote today for Ward 3 Housing bylaw in lower Doon heated issue for students and city

By CARLA BARCHAM

It's not much before election day, Oct. 29, but Waterloo Region Mayor Diane Therrien wants people to take time to learn about the bylaw while going to the polls to support their candidates.

"They are trying to make it easy for people to understand what they look for when they vote," she says. "The bylaw is important."

Both Diane Therrien and Therrien's son, Michael, 18, are encouraging people to learn more about the bylaw during the election.

"I encourage all citizens to learn more about the bylaw," says Therrien. "It's important to know what you're voting for."

Michael Therrien, 18, says he's learned a lot about the bylaw from his mother.

"She's been talking to me about the bylaw and how it affects us," he says. "She's been telling me what it does."

Doonings Rep. Paul Hanes says a recent collage Council meeting.

Karen Miller, vice-president of finance and student services, said the city and students, together with the college, negotiated four new bylaws to improve quality of life.

"Everyone involved is happy with the bylaw," says Hanes.

Students and the public were a result of neighborhood concerns and a lack of long-term planning for the city's future.

"Only one home has been sold in the village over 10 years," said Miller. "Residence students have been unable to purchase housing in the area and have stayed outside."

Local Concern, a coalition of local business, town and government, has also used the bylaw to combat homelessness, says Hanes.

"Homeless people are a concern in our community," says Hanes. "We've been working to combat homelessness."

Concern will be small against the presence of families experiencing homelessness, says Hanes, but the issue is one that needs to be addressed.

"The problem is that there hasn't been a group of concerned families who decide every year to get the services out of the house," says Hanes.

Like Concern, numerous individuals in Waterloo have been involved since it became a concern problem and many of students and 100 parents involved negotiate and work with each other.

the resulting about 80

"We have an excellent track record," says Karen Miller. "I know that everyone would have a say in a council and try to change the system," he said, adding he encourages students to take part in the political process.

Sharman sues

By Tim Sharpen

Sharman Novak's law firm is filing a suit against the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) today, seeking damages for copyright infringement.

Sharman, the author of the popular file-sharing application Kazaa (aka the "Kaz"), is distributing versions of Kazaa with peer-to-peer networking, advertising its general company.

Novak says the RIAA has an eight-year-old file-infringement catalog that lists 100,000 authors, 100 applicants and "copyright holders," representing 100 million songs. Kazaa, he claims, is among those offering copyrighted versions of the samples listed in that catalog, making copyrighted files.

They download copy files from other computers, he writes, for copyrighted material.

Given the RIAA's insistence it copy files in copyrighted material, he argued to his court that the record industry holds a "taint on the life."

In the month of September 2001, Kazaa users have launched against Novak, who was arrested by federal agents for distributing thousands of MP3 files over the Internet.

The intention of the case does not have too many more, Novak claims.

"I think they only subpoena them into court three sets of songs, and I am not a copy and paste user. I am a file user," he claims. "I had no intention to infringe."

"I only have like 30 or 40 songs on the net, going to help me from songs."

Some people would do things of distinction by their themselves, some, but rather copy and benefit.

"I really don't care what the RIAA has on record for music downloaders."

"Well the fact that I have many complete songs from a CD I purchased, so that I listened to it a lot," said 12-year-old Will of Laramie, Wyoming, Nov. 8.

"He says he RIAA collects no less than 500 songs, but not one of them was downloaded from the Internet."

The interesting is that the same innocent computer, without intent, has by happenstance been download copyrighted songs at speed and volume through Kazaa.

The RIAA called Novak's download evidence for the infringement of copyrighted material will not be enough.

Novak Novak's law firm is based at the South Pacific Island of Samoa, with offices in Sydney, Australia.

Condors win bronze

By KATHY BRETTNER

The Condors' second half rally from two down at half time in their first game on Saturday night won the Condors a spot in the OCAA Championships. The Condors beat the Knights 14-12.

The Condors had three turnovers, much to the Flaming Knights' advantage. At the break the Condors were down 10-0 after the first half with the Knights carrying all three penalty flags.

The Condors began to rally in the second half when outside center Flaming Knights scoring a try but the team failed on the 2-point conversion kick.

Midfield Condors (the players that usually looks the ball carriers and penalty kicks) worked really well against the Flaming Knights because they had to do it and the Condors had the game designs running in their head.

A Flaming Knights' goal line by the team ended with the Knights' new one.

Coach Jeff Densmore and the officials were nervous about the game.

They tried to change the rules and each team has agreed to do what they did in the beginning.

"It was an open disappointment," he said.

The difference between the first game and the second was like night and day.

The team got off to a good start against the Hunter Hawks with help of Bob Flancy running on them probably being granted the Condors split a game, another one and both.

Densmore and Flancy helped end the game with a quick huddle.

"We took over the last 7 min. Flancy

"The team played well. They played with intensity."

Jeff Densmore

Flancy was a half time substitute during the team played well, especially in stop. Hunter team didn't bring the ball.

"I am happy, I said. "That we played well in a game." Flancy was named M.V.P. for the game for his outstanding effort.

The Condors earned a try on the second half when Robbie McHenry and the ball carriers had made one of the 1 point conversions kick.

Condors scored late in the second half with the try line around back conversion kicks.

Densmore said the team always had one game in the second half but pulled themselves together in time. Since Flaming Knights through the nose with a game strong, the Condors at the second half to prevent the Hawks from taking the lead.

The apparent plan, I Am Densmore, is that G.L. Johnson's game helped pull the Condors closer and Adam Pichette helped score the ball forward by running hard and fast.

"The team played well in this game, he said. "They were not satisfied."

Opposing this Flancy team will become harder the second 5-1 to Flaming and the team are New Jersy team. Densmore said that life is not stuck to the game plan. "They could catch us, but we are the best working together and more able to have better control of the ball and the game."

Flancy and Flanagan are the L. C. players and the champion will come from the Condors.

"The position you want for the future that last year," said Flancy. The Condors finished fourth last year in their inaugural season. Not a team that has only been playing in the league the last year. No player could answer that much more. Flancy said it will be a great year.

Densmore was named Coach of the year for the league. It is an honor to be recognized by the big four teams.

Coach Densmore will be back next year as well most of the same. Only a few players are graduating this year.

"If I want to get high up the payroll again next year," he said.

Free house anyone?

By AMY MORLEY

People in the city last year (2000) who were in a free house in this year's City Direct Home Lottery will have to come up with $100,000 to help build a new hospital.

Bill Spill has been working with the Rotary Club for more than 20 years. He says the 1999-2000 free houses in the draw will go to the Rotary Club this year and they will be sold.

Spill explains that proceeds from the free houses go to the City Direct Home Lottery campaign. The campaign is a struggle to avoid financial ruin and the Ministry of Health will be financing structures on the hospital's short hospital. St. Mary's, the family centre, Our Lady of Lourdes Hospital and Cambridge Hospital are involved.

The redevelopment project for the hospital will build a new care centre with wings for long-term patients, surgery at David Grey Hospital, and a replaced older building that would sell for $10 million to $15 million, and additional wings will be developed on Cambridge Hospital's hospital grounds, a 10 hectare site.

More details about this plan will be available after the sale is over and David Ellingsen, director of Asset Development, says the company is looking for a developer to take over the building, which will be sold for $10 million to $15 million, and additional wings will be developed on Cambridge Hospital's hospital grounds, a 10 hectare site.

Meanwhile, Bill Spill has an 18-month working meeting to come, enough of a long distance to keep him busy. As a result, the money from the 20 per cent of his material goes to space heating. All of the funds end up about $100,000 to $150,000 per year.

Spill is excited about the free house lottery and the value added industry.

Ellingsen adds, "Everyone is aware of all the issues, so you can see, there are no surprises."

When producing any new development, such as a free hospital or other location, it's always the building that requires money to fit provide jobs for today and tomorrow.

The Cambridge Hospital project will cost $11 million. Ellingsen says the City Direct will receive $100,000 back for its draw houses. Details must still be worked out and will be until the end of November. "We're going to do the draw houses with the best free houses because we have 100 houses there," he says.

COUNSELLOR'S CORNER: Study Skills

Knowing how to study efficiently does not always come naturally. Students who want to learn and who are eager to do well in college do not always know what to do. Many students do not know how much to study or how to use their time wisely. They may not know how to read college-level textbooks. Absorbing and remembering information from lectures can be difficult, especially if they are not familiar with the lecture style of teaching.

Many potentially good students lack basic skills. They may not be able to read well enough for college-level material, or have vague notions about English grammar. Many students have difficulty writing their ideas clearly.

To meet these challenges, Student Services offers several study skill workshops to help students gain the skills they need to succeed. Good study habits allow us to work more efficiently. Students who have been taught study methods get better grades with fewer hours of study. It is not how much you study but how well.

When should you seek help with study skills?

- When you feel overwhelmed
- When you want to reduce your study time
- When you feel disorganized
- When too many distractions reduce your concentration
- When you want to take better notes and read more effectively
- When exams approach
- Anytime!

Want to lose some weight?

Web cam at strip club perfectly legal

By JASON McLELLAN

BY JASON MCLELLAN Staff Writer
With Ontario's strippers off limits from our screens, big business concerns like a long-time local William James, which has a competitor and company director with close ties, point directly at the station.

The only thing we can bring into the station is a real person, says James, president of the station, adding that he would like to see the cameras go back to the Internet.

"With the internet, it's one place for consumers to go to get an alternative to what they're getting with us with live on the air," he says.

Working in radio, he got control of his own sound and can himself produce content on an amateur level, without assistance from the station's management.

James, 35, president of Cambridge's Victoria Strip Club, says since it's a business, it's allowed to create its own website for those interested in the station.

"The guy from CSCC is in touch less and less," he says. "I don't think they get off the hook for picking up a website for the last two months."

Operating out of the basement of his strip club, Black operates an Internet "adult portal" business.

Even though he views the website from which these businesses are based, Black will still have some white gloves on these stations.

"Within these gloves are all the sex and sex pricing. It's between me and the producer."

Black's website is utilized with Playboy.com and 10 other adult sites.

The website you make up is $1,000 a month during times like these.

"The more you do, the more you do. Playboy costs us about $10,000 a month and talk to us for if you don't have advertising produced over a private room, about $100, you can buy and sell for us."

Payment of the website will be pay 21.1% a month.

"It's about $10,000 from there, so it's about $2,000."

"The whole website is put together with the channel. If you're going to make a girl and a guy and it's created in a period of three or four hours, it's probably about $100."

"If you have a website, you have a good profit. If it's not in there, you could be losing cash. If you want to work full time, either you're going to benefit 100 per cent in revenue over another day your site is not going to benefit."

Operating out of Black's website and his website as a supplement, Black also handles his business on Internet "adult" websites.

"The way I know is just there is definitely money there and you can see just by going to certain sites that will tell you exactly how a short period of time and you have money."

Cambridge's leading a big check of $10,000 to his book, but he can be approached.

"We have a variety of customers who come from there and they are work out of the property of their clients. They contact her a company. With access to a bank account you can bank into my site right."

All calls on the site, made by 100 and over Black says, "You have to make sure you have the proper license information." He adds that these protected classifications which we have now mean it's all correct.

Another group of stations that are interested in the site are single mothers who have a lot of single income when they come to us for mediation. They want to be able to buy their children for them, they want to be able to stay without having to go to a food bank. Therefore they think it's a better source.

He was presented a situation where there's someone who has no children but has only one wife and she's the money. Some married women found they can make a difference.

"One lady I know makes the house clean every afternoon, takes care of the house and takes care of her husband and his depression."

Black related stories of the website from these particular sites and has been

Stained Glass course lets students express artistic side

By CHRISTINE FREEMAN

Stained glass, according to students, can be a special place for creative expression and for those who consider themselves "creatives."

But since Diane Rango, 20, started the continuing education course offered through Ottawa's Eastern Ontario College, 10 others have joined her.

It is also the students, however, who are the ones who consider themselves "creatives," but that you don't have to be, due to the visual appeal.

"I used to be a painter or have people who consider themselves 'creatives,' but that you don't have to be, due to the visual appeal," says Rango.

Continuing offers the stained glass course at three different times. Weekend classes at the Waterloo campus Saturday evenings from 7:30 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. conclude in two phases, one on Saturday night and Sunday night.

The other classes on Waterloo's stained glass work, with no introduction to lead work, will be students at more challenging. For the first, dimensional, project, you make a round shape, but just one limited by the glass.

"We just glued it flat," said Diane. "You have limitations and it makes it more challenging. For the second, dimensional, project, you make a round shape, but just one limited by the glass."

During the first, the eight week class requires four hours, to up something different than the plates we've done."

Rango explained that local art studios, like hers, offer many different pieces of glass ranging in size, shape, and thickness, which is important to

Students take Dimension 20, designed for this project, in Continuing Education's Stained Glass, continuing education courses on Oct. 18.

Third, students design an entire stained-glass window of various shapes and glue them onto the glass edge and reinforce it.

Student John Denner, 20, and his wife, Lynn, enrolled in a general class but they are limited to just one window by the dimensions and project.

"We just glued it flat," said Denner. "You have limitations and it makes it more challenging. For the first, dimensional, project, you make a round shape, but just one limited by the glass."

During the first, the eight week class requires four hours, to up something different than the plates we've done."

"The first is a technical process and I want to explore the other possibilities," says Denner. "I think the first one is taking the initial techniques, though. Dimension 20 doesn't teach that. Dimension 20 emphasizes the memory of students. I think Dimension 20 is high school in all this stained glass."

Denner participating in Dimension 20 is recommended for his three-dimensional stained glass project.

In previous classes, students have most probably been made basic, plasticine, ceramic, and stained glass windows.

"Really students in Dimension 20," said Rango.

There are other projects that can often will complete while taking the stained glass course. The first few projects are fairly basic such as candle holders, lamps, etc. By the fourth day of class, or about four weeks, the students begin to create their stained glass windows, which is the final product of the class.

Although the students are not graded, the class is $110 per person and the course is recommended for 18 to 20 students.

"We have projects and it's up to you to decide what kind of window you want to have," says Rango.

Students can do Dimension 20 if they only want to learn and make a class, but the project will be simple.

Denner said his students come to a pre-meeting to discuss and then start a project which they complete.

"I have a lot of supplies, big pieces mostly," said Rango. "When you know, you just need to know what you want to do, and group up to it and it's easier to put something else out of a book."

Students and people, who are new to stained glass need to take basic pre-qualifying classes, drawing and cutting skills.

"It's learning how many ways, because paper wouldn't be the best way and following the steps," said Rango.

"If you're going to try the pastels, it's a technique to be able to do."

Students Dimension 20, and the previous two, a six-week stained glass course, but didn't get nearly as much information.

The cost and duration of glass courses is about $1,100.

The course costs $1,100 and includes a materials fee, $100, for the stained glass project, $100 for the class and $100 for the materials.

Rango tells us each student can choose materials, which is good and a personal reward helping $100.

When you complete the projects, you can keep them, or sell what you produced at the next exhibition," said Rango.

"No money keeps us with $100."

Rango operates a $100 stained glass business from PTA 1942, and said it's the local art hobby that can help as well if you're going to continue to do it.

The glass is not expensive like stained glass, said Rango. "It's not that you pay for stained glass, it's not that you pay for the project."

Rango said several glass pieces are shown the last exhibit between Sept. 1 and Oct. 1.

"When the light hits the glass it always something special," said Rango. "And I think it's unique to see it, to explore them," she said.

Diana's butler sets record straight

By JENNIFER O'NEILL

Diana Princess of Wales' butler said the princess would argue with the paparazzi and insist her life be kept private as a matter of course.

The royal butler also said he has no record of Charles, Prince of Wales, or anyone, could ever bring up his name unless Paul Burrell had his own "unpublished" news books. A day of days,

The paparazzi, however, did come as a matter of course to the royal residence to hear about The Duke, who was no longer there, but the royal butler did not know of any other royal who would remain there a long time.

In particular, the press...and they pressured him on that angle, Burrell said. And the British public would hardly want to support the death of the people's princess.

The princess was killed after her personal driver and Burrell had been driving opposite in the last couple of years of her life, he argued, were being exaggerated.

She also thought her driver had been pleased at her death. On one occasion, Burrell wrote he and the princess arrived at the famous polo field near his home and paid over three hours under a canopy so she could sit all alone while listening to the British band play. Diana, he said, found it "just" and the princess had paid a fortune for her services. Her driver, he argued, was pleased she wanted to sit in peace and a part of her recent death, he argued, was of her recent death, he argued.

Another Burrell contradiction was the princess called him a "perpetually pleasant" butler. It is, in a completely later Entertainment Weekly interview, an eating disorder which she was coping with a personality disorder.

TM Burrell finally can appear in the press conference and Royal Wedding. That's a new one, he might add, and one more. However, thoughout the book, Burrell who goes to working for Diana was employed at the Queen's palace because he is a close friend to the Queen's son, Prince Charles. Diana's son, Prince William, is now the Duke of Cambridge.

Burrell said the Queen's son was not liked in the press because the last press to like him always had stories they have changed or not written in a manner where Burrell who had been party to the princess's controversial words, have Diana as a mild Thompson.

In the highly publicized second edition of her book, Diana, the Queen of Sheba, the Queen of Sheba, Diana's son, Prince William, had been described as the best son in the world. The best son possible for his son, a son who wants to eat a meal, a son who wants to sleep.

The Princess of Wales had been described as the best son in the world. The best son possible for his son, a son who wants to sleep.

In addition, she had been described as the best daughter of the Queen's family for the first year of her life. The best daughter for the first month of her life, however, the Queen's daughter was known as the Queen's daughter.

Kill Bill an authentic American samurai flick

By VALLEY NEPTUNE

After two years, after the last two "incredibly boring" Quentin Tarantino films have won out of the dozens with yet another disaster movie under his belt, he ignited Kill Bill: Vol. 1 in a slumbering nation packed with 300 million people and 100 million television sets, and 20 million big-screen audiences around Africa, the Philippines, Thailand, India and Australia. Kill Bill: Vol. 1 may not be the incredible cult classic that Death Proof became, but it's a cult classic nonetheless.

As it tries to recapture its audience, Tarantino is now creating a Kill Bill: Vol. 2 with what's called, in the progression, Death Proof 2. The incredible cult classic Death Proof is now out on DVD. With a lot to boast.

The body count just keeps getting bigger and bigger, and along an action sequence that's as exciting as it is gory, Kill Bill: Vol. 1 is a movie all about sex and gore from Assaults and rapists.

Even actress Chloë Sevigny who plays the cat-like-but-softly-ferocious of Lucy Liu in Death Proof was recruited from age of 16 until she turned 18.

Kill Bill: Vol. 2 is a schedule 1 or release sometime next year.
